U.S. Air Force Brig. Gen. Gregory Kreuder, 56th Fighter Wing commander, relinquished command to U.S. Air Force Brig. Gen. Jason Rueschhoff, during a change of command ceremony at Luke Air Force Base, Arizona, July 29, 2022.

Rueschhoff, a command pilot with more than 2,800 flight hours in the F-35A, A-10C, AH 64-E, T-38 and T-37, including more than 250 combat hours, arrived to Luke AFB following a position as the deputy commander of the 7th Air Force at Osan Air Base, Republic of Korea.

He earned his commission and a Bachelor of Science degree from the United States Air Force Academy in 1997, in addition to Masters Degrees in Military Operational Art and Science, Airpower Art and Science, and one in Strategic Studies.

U.S. Air Force Maj. Gen. Craig Wills, 19th Air Force commander, Joint Base San Antonio-Randolph, Texas, presided over the ceremony welcoming Rueschhoff.

"One of the great things about our Air Force is that we are one great family and when an Airmen steps aside, there's another one standing right there to take up the flag and take it to new heights," said Wills. "We are very fortunate to welcome Brig. Gen. Rueschhoff and his family to the 56th Fighter Wing."

Rueschhoff thanked everyone in attendance and those who supported him in the path to get here, and addressed the wing.

"I am thrilled to be able to stand here and take command of this wing, but I know who is really running this, it's you all," said Rueschhoff. "You are the one's making it happen. I look forward to meeting all of you. Look forward to working with all of you. Look forward to learning from you."

Wills also praised Kreuder for his accomplishments and thanked the wing for their commitment over the past two years.

"Freddy (Kreuder), your dedication has been truly world class," said Wills.

Kreuder welcomed Rueschhoff and expressed gratitude to the men and women of the 56th Fighter Wing.

"To the men and women of the 56th Fighter Wing, I am truly grateful to have had the honor to serve with you these past two years," said Kreuder. "I could not be more proud of all you do every single day to train the world's greatest fighter pilots and combat ready Airmen. You've both figuratively and literally built the future of Air Power right here at Luke Air Force Base. I know you will continue to reach even greater heights with Brig. Gen. Rueschhoff at the helm."

"I cannot think of anybody that is better equipped, better trained, or a better human being to take this 56th Fighter Wing," continued Kreuder. "The men and women of the 56th Fighter Wing are going to serve our nation well and will take care of you as you take care of them."

Luke AFB officials showcase mission for AETC leadership team visit

By Airman
MASON HARGROVE

56 Fighter Wing Public Affairs

U.S. Air Force Lt. Gen. Brian S. Robinson, commander of Air Education and Training Command, and U.S. Air Force Chief Master Sgt. Erik Thompson, command chief of AETC, engaged with Airmen and gained insights of various missions during a visit to Luke Air Force Base, Arizona, July 20 and 21, 2022.

The leadership team visited units including the 62nd, 63rd, and 425th Fighter Squadrons, the 310th Aircraft Maintenance Unit, and the 607th Air Control Squadron. Each stop allowed U.S. Air Force Lt. Gen. Brian S. Robinson, commander of Air Education and Training Command, talks with Col. William Ray, 56th Maintenance Group commander, at Luke Air Force Base, Arizona, July 21, 2022. Luke AFB serves as an F-35 and F-16 pilot training location for the U.S. Air Force and five partner nations, allowing for increased interoperability between the nations' air forces.

LEFT: U.S. Air Force Lt. Gen. Brian S. Robinson, commander of Air Education and Training Command, learns how the 56th Security Forces Squadron is integrating the new Weapons & Tactics program into training at Luke Air Force Base, Arizona, July 21, 2022. The 56th SFS is finding ways to innovate and accelerate change by integrating new initiatives into training at Luke AFB.

Robinson and Thompson the opportunity to speak with Airmen and gain first-hand understanding of their unique missions and culture, while also observing overall contributions to the AETC training environment.

Airmen also offered in-depth perspectives about the direct impact their roles have in the execution of Luke's missions. An example of the waves Airmen are making to training and mission capability was housed within the 56th Security Forces Squadron Combat Arms Training and Maintenance (CATM) unit. The team explained their initiatives to innovate through integration of the Weapons and Tactics program into CATM at Luke AFB.

Robinson also met with some personnel from the Republic of Singapore Air Force and discussed the importance of multinational collaboration and interoperability amongst ally and partner nations.

When visiting the 56th Mission Support Group, U.S. Air Force Col. Anthony Mullinax, 56th MSG commander, briefed Robinson on the current and future state of the quality of life for Luke Airmen, infrastructure, and agile combat employment initiatives.

As the largest fighter wing within the United States Air Force, Luke's ability to shape the future of air superiority is unmatched.

"Luke is the proving ground for how we train and team the majority of fighter pilots for the world's greatest Air Force," Robinson said. "Not only that, but the sheer volume of support provided to our international partners in training showcases Luke's credibility as an epicenter of airpower. The Airmen and programs here today, establish the successes of tomorrow."

Chaplain's thoughts ...

Self-acceptance

By Chaplain (Capt.)
CHASE ROTMAN

IMA, 56th Fighter Wing

We all have parts of us that we don't like. Whether it's the way we communicate, look, talk, or think. The parts of us we do not like or appreciate are often met with denial rather than self-acceptance, much like Nasrudin — the protagonist of many Middle Eastern, Greek, and Russian folktales.

In one story of these folktales, Nasrudin was approaching the door of his house one night when he suddenly realized he had lost his key. He tried to look around for it, but the night was so dark he could hardly see the ground. So he got down on his hands and knees and examined the ground where he was standing; however, it was still too dark to see anything. Moving back toward a streetlamp, he again got down and began a meticulous examination of the area.

A friend came by and noticing him asked what he was doing. Nasrudin replied, "I lost my key and am looking for it." So, the friend got down on his hands and knees and began to search as well. After a while the friend asked, "Do you remember where you might have lost the key?" "Certainly," answered Nasrudin, "I lost it in my house." "Then why are you looking for it out here?" asked the friend. "Because," answered Nasrudin, "the light is so much better here."

We are all much more like Nasrudin than we would like to acknowledge. Searching for the missing key of self-acceptance, but we tend to look for it outside of ourselves where it seems easiest to inspect. However, the key is inside, in the dark.

For example, we think if we spend our income on big vacations, expensive jewelry, or the newest technology we will finally be loved like we desire. Yet the key is inside, in the dark, where we can truly see ourselves as we are. Freud noted that the things about ourselves that we avoid will most tyrannize us. Self-acceptance does not increase the power of things that need to be eliminated, rather it weakens them. It robs them of the power they develop when they operate in our denial. Before we can move forward and encounter progress in our lives, relationships and work, we must accept who we are because we cannot give up what we do not possess.

If you're feeling stuck and lost, know that you are not alone. It can be scary to see ourselves for who we really are right now. However, if you are afraid to make this journey alone, I want to encourage you to sit down with one of our chaplains. Regardless of your personal faith background or belief, our chapel team is here to support you. We are trained to help as you continue to grow into who you truly are.

As we make the journey to self-acceptance remember that we cannot give up what we do not possess.

It's change of command season at Luke Air Force Base. U.S. Air Force Brig. Gen. Gregory Kreuder, 56th Fighter Wing commander, served as the reviewing officer when U.S. Air Force Col. George Watkins relinquished command of the 56th Operations Group to U.S. Air Force Col. Matthew Johnston on June 3, 2022.

Johnston, a command pilot with more than 2,000 flight hours in the T-37, T-38, AT-38, F-16C/D, and F-35A Joint Strike Fighter, earned his commission from the United States Air Force Academy in 2001 with a Bachelor of Science in Management.

Having served as the director of operations for the 388th Operations Support Squadron and as the commander of the 34th Fighter Squadron at Hill AFB, Utah, Johnston says he understands how much squadron commanders have on their plates.

"I see my role as an enabler," said Johnston. "I want to help eliminate obstacles so squadron commanders, senior leadership, and Airmen can do their jobs."

This is Johnston's second assignment to Luke AFB. In 2007, he was an F-16 Fighting Falcon pilot evaluator and chief of training for the 309th Fighter Squadron. He says he is impressed with what he has seen while visiting the flight line and is excited to be back in fighter country.

"I really want to see the squadrons accomplish their mission," said Johnston. "If they're accomplishing their mission, the group accomplishes its mission."

LUKE AFB UNVEILS

Story and photos by Senior Airman
CALEB F. BUTLER

56 Fighter Wing Public Affairs

The 56th Equipment Maintenance Squadron unveiled an F-16D Fighting Falcon painted in a heritage color scheme at the 310th Air Maintenance Unit hanger on Luke Air Force Base, Arizona, June 17, 2022. This particular jet was the first American F-16 to score an aerial victory.

"The aircraft earned the moniker 'MiG Killer' as a result of the events that took place on Dec. 27, 1992," said U.S. Air Force 1st Lt. James Mobbley, 56th EMS Fabrication Flight officer in charge, at the unveiling ceremony. "On this day, Lt. Col. Gary 'Nordo' North, who was flying this F-16D, tail number 0778, led a flight of four F-16s on a routine Operation Southern Watch mission in Iraq."

During this mission, an armed MiG-25 Foxbat entered into the no-fly zone. Realizing that he and his wingmen were in danger, North requested clearance to fire.

"He finally heard 'bandit-bandit-bandit, cleared to kill' over his headset," said Mobbley. "North locked on with an AIM-120 AMRAAM (Advanced Medium Range Anti-Aircraft Missile), fired his missile, and eliminated the MiG."

The paint scheme for this jet was accomplished by 12 Fabrication Flight Airmen assigned to corrosion control at Luke AFB, as a means of honoring North's actions and Air Force heritage. The paint job required 1,500 man-hours and more than 13 gallons of paint.

"This 'What if' design pulls cues from the Desert Camouflage Uniform worn during the first Gulf War, and a similar experimental livery of camouflage that was tested at that time," said U.S. Air Force Staff Sgt. Michael Cichonsky, 56th Equipment Maintenance Squadron F-35 low observable aircraft structural maintainer. "Very few pictures exist of the test scheme, since it was hand rolled using latex paint, and only lasted a week before being removed. With this design, we not only pay homage to the history of General North and 0778, but it also allows us to reimagine if this paint scheme was selected for use during Operation Southern Watch."

CAMARADERIE AND CREATIVITY COME TOGETHER IN

CE CHALLENGE

U.S. Air Force photos by Airman 1st Class Jakob Hambright

Members of the 56th Civil Engineer Squadron race their amphibious vehicles during the squadron's team building event at Luke Air Force Base, Arizona, July 21, 2022. The engineers were given full creative freedom with their designs, with the only rules requiring the driver to wear a hat, and for at least one red drink cup to be included in the design.

Members of the 56th Civil Engineer Squadron prepare to test their homemade amphibious vehicles at Luke Air Force Base, Arizona, July 21, 2022. The vehicles were designed and built by the engineers as part of a morale-boosting event within the squadron.

Members of the 56th Civil Engineer Squadron attempt to float across a pool with their amphibious vehicles during a squadron team building event at Luke Air Force Base, Arizona, July 21, 2022. The vehicles were judged based on how fast they could complete a lap inside the base gym and also outside in the base pool.
